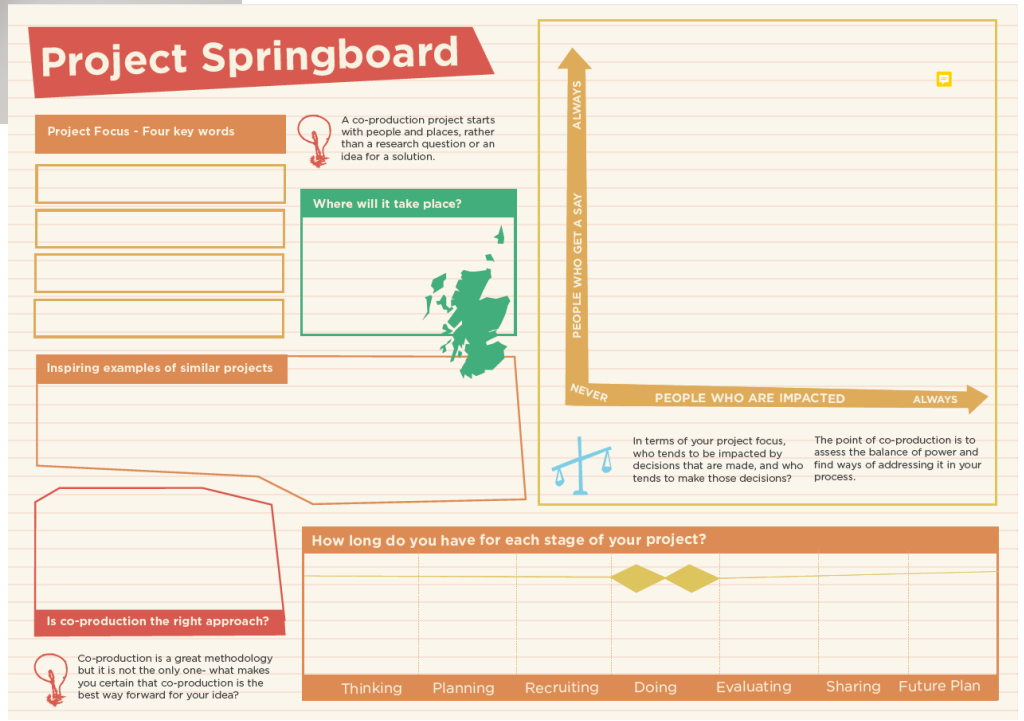
Iriss

DURHAM COLLEGE
SUCCESS MATTERS

Co-production-
a word used to describe when people with different interests come together to create change as a group.

Project Planner
Research interview
A great tool to use if you would like to:
Support people to learn about each other
Discover more about the group
Expand the groups' knowledge
You will need
Printed tool
Pens and pencils
Video recorder or smart phones
How to use the tool
Co-production tools

FAST START



Project Springboard
Project Focus - Four key words
A co-production project starts with people and places, rather than a research question or an idea for a solution.
Where will it take place?
Inspiring examples of similar projects
ALWAYS
PEOPLE WHO GET A SAY NEVER
PEOPLE WHO ARE IMPACTED
ALWAYS
In terms of your project focus, who tends to be impacted by decisions that are made, and who tends to make those decisions?
The point of co-production is to assess the balance of power and find ways of addressing it in your process.
How long do you have for each stage of your project?
Thinking
Planning Recruiting
Doing
Evaluating
Sharing
Future Plan
Is co-production the right approach?
Co-production is a great methodology but it is not the only one- what makes you certain that co-production is the best way forward for your idea?

The Gap Committee

Together We Can

Prevent and End Homelessness in Durham Region

Co-Design of a Youth-Led Housing Hub

"What I've learned from co-production through this experience is that it's so easy to sit in an "expert chair"…

…but without including the individuals for whom this service is being designed in that process, it's a huge miss."

Building Bridges Together:
Co-production of Financial Empowerment Strategies for People Experiencing Low Income.
Financial literacy strategies that work

Questions??